Canadian National Parks featured in book series

George Mercer

NIKKI FREDRIKSON
nikki@invermerevalleyecho.com

It's a first for Canada — a fiction book series set in the Canadian national parks. With every book set in a different park, the two main characters deal with real issues in Canadian parks. Author George Mercer uses his own experiences working as a park warden to bring the stories alive.

"Each story is set in a different national park so it follows my characters across the country from the East Coast to the West, including the north and the Rockies," Mercer told The Echo. "It's a pair of park wardens by the name Ben Matthews and his partner Kate Jones. The intent is that the series more or less follows them, but there probably will be some changes in each book with characters coming and going."

To date, Mercer has two published books in the series. The first, titled Dyed in the Green (which is also the name of the series), is set in Cape Breton Highlands National Park in Nova Scotia. The second book, Woof Buffalo, is set in Wood Buffalo National Park in the Northwest Territories. With a third book developing for a 2017 release, Mercer plans for the series to continue to five or six books.
